The interdisciplinary Honors seminar course shell exists to serve programmatic needs of Honors and its related special programs, including the Special Program in Medicine and Dental Medicine, the Special Program in Law, the Rowe Scholars Program, and the Honors community at UConn Stamford. There are no specified learning objectives at the shell level, but all topics are approved by the Honors Board Course Review Subcommittee prior to the first offering. The review, which requires the submission of a syllabus, ensures:

- The planned course merits 3 Honors credits at the 3000-level.
- It is truly interdisciplinary in nature.
- It will be taught in a seminar style (small group, active learning).
- That UNIV 3784 is the appropriate home for the course, as opposed to a special topics or a separate stand-alone course. This usually means that students in a specific program within Honors are expected to take a specific topic at a certain point in their undergraduate career.

Instructors for UNIV 3784 sections are expected to seek Honors Board approval for any substantial modification of their topics.

A faculty committee is currently working on a redesigned course for the UConn Stamford campus. The existing format will be taught in Fall 2022 while the redesign takes place, with approval by the Honors Board Course Review Subcommittee anticipated in Spring 2023 for a 2023-2024 offering.
